

OVERVIEW Information Technology for the Not-for-Profit Sector is a practical, hands-on guide to developing and implementing an information technology strategy. The book covers core topics such as selecting the appropriate hardware and software, accompanied by coverage of issues such as training, health and safety and data protection. The use of the internet and e-mail are also given the prominence they deserve. Full attention is given to topics of particular relevance to the sector, such as finding sector-friendly suppliers and consultants and identifying software for fundraising management and service provisions. The book is presented in a non-technical, business-orientated style and assumes minimal IT knowledge. It is also illustrated with checklists, templates and case studies and includes a Directory of further information and other resources.
